Since 2012, the Building a Better Response (BBR) Project has strengthened the capacity of humanitarian actors in improving coordination and response during emergencies. With more than 90,000 users in 192 countries, the BBR E-learning serves as a resource for those responding to humanitarian crises across the globe.

Funded by the U.S. Agency for International Development's Bureau of Humanitarian Assistance, the BBR Project is implemented through a consortium that brings together a unique combination of operational and technical expertise, spearheaded by International Medical Corps in collaboration with Concern Worldwide and the Harvard Humanitarian Initiative.

You are invited to a reception to celebrate the launch of the newly enhanced BBR E-Learning tool. The project team will introduce its key features, which include a new cast of characters, cutting-edge technology, improved usability, and updated curriculum.

Please feel free to extend this invitation to colleagues and others working in the international humanitarian community.
